LIVE STOCK TALK.

Horses must be upheaded, have spirit and finish and be fast walkers. Be sure the box for salt in the sheep quarters is kept filled. Drop everything to help a horse or a cow that is in trouble, no matter whether it is your own or your neighbor's. Farming on a business basis eliminates small mules just as it displaces small horses. Beef cattle may be raised on many farms, and there are good reasons for raising them. Not the least of these is that they provide a means of building up the farm in fertility. There are profits in raising good horses and mules as one of the features of farming. Get a few good mares and let them bring you a good income raising horses and mules. Those who have silos full of silage find winter feeding easy and satisfactory to the live stock.

WINTER PIG FEEDING.

An Illinois Farmer's Views on Best Method of Handling Swine.

The pigs found about many farms at this season of the year may be found under almost all conditions, writes an Illinois farmer in the Iowa Homestead. Everything, with the exception of those intended to be retained as breeding stock, should be ready for the market by the time the spring pigs arrive. The more comfortable these young shotes can be made the more easily will they gain. An animal of this kind should be fed all the food he can consume, and anything short of this is unprofitable. This simply means that the pigs should be given all they can eat and clean up readily twice a day. It is best never to allow any feed to be left in the trough from one feeding time till the next, as it will simply be a waste and of no benefit to the animals.

The question of feed is one of great moment. The available feed supply with a great many consists mostly of ear corn. More or less of the waste from vegetable and fruit cellars can find its way to the pigs to good advantage. Ear corn ground fine makes excellent feed for pigs and when mixed with an equal part of best quality of wheat bran, scalded or cooked if possible, and fed somewhat thick will be found one of the best growing and flesh forming rations. Oatmeal and barley may be added to very good advantage and the quality of the pork benefited.

The pigs as found in the different neighborhoods will vary very much in quality, and it is a good plan to cull out and market the ripest ones as they come on. This plan has the advantage of giving the owner some money to use, and also this gradual placing of the product on the market would avoid any dull conditions that a glut is most sure to entail.

Much of the ear corn can be fed as it is on the cob. I have always considered it best to mix a quantity of feed at a time and where possible dump in a lot of skim milk. This not only helps to make a very palatable feed, but also a very nutritious combination.

It is well to keep a plentiful supply of charcoal, ashes and salt in the pens at all times. A feature that is very necessary is to keep the pigs in a healthy condition, and these are of great benefit in maintaining the animals in such a state.

The pigs should be given dry and well ventilated quarters, which must be kept clean. Contrary to common belief, hogs have some habits which raise them above other domestic animals from the standpoint of cleanliness. For example, a hog will not sleep in its own filth unless compelled to do so. If part of the floor of the pen is raised and kept well bedded with straw, while the rest is not, all excrement will be left on the unbedded portion of the floor, and the bed itself will always be clean. All feeding and drinking places should be kept clean and the water supply pure.
